Logo

Hra s „HU“ nefunguje. Vrátit se k malým písmenům a pomlčce (faktický název firmy).

Barvy

Paleta je OK, ale příliš blízká jiným projektům. Zvážit výraznější, odlišnější barevné řešení.

Font

Speciální litery (např. „y“) jsou matoucí. Sazba je špatně čitelná.

Vizuální identita

Příliš mnoho prvků najednou — fotky, texty, boxy, barevné plochy. Výsledek působí zmateně, ne jako partner, který umí udělat pořádek a strategicky uvažovat.

Cíl: čistá, jednoduchá, funkční identita.

Klienti a reference

Ukázat klienty kreativně .Do budoucna case studies, zatím spíš obecná prezentace spolupráce.

Celkové zadání

Méně je více. Identita má být čitelná, důvěryhodná a radostná při používání — pro tým i klienty.

The Enchanted Forest of Silverwood

Once upon a time, in a land where the rivers ran silver and the trees whispered ancient secrets to those who dared to listen, there existed a small village called Maplehaven.

The villagers lived simple yet magical lives, tending to their gardens of luminous flowers that glowed softly in the evening dusk. Every child born in Maplehaven was said to carry a tiny spark of forest magic in their heart, a gift bestowed by the great elder oak that stood at the center of the village square.

One autumn morning, a young girl named Elara discovered a peculiar golden feather at the edge of the Silverwood. It shimmered with a light that seemed to breathe, pulsing gently like a heartbeat. The village elders gathered around it with wide eyes and hushed voices, for according to the oldest legends, such a feather could only belong to the mythical Sunbird — a creature that had not been seen in over three hundred years. Elara clutched the feather tightly and made a quiet, fierce decision: she would venture into the forest to find it.

The forest was nothing like the stories warned her it would be. Instead of shadows and thorns, she found corridors of amber light filtering through crimson leaves, and paths lined with soft moss that seemed to guide her feet forward. Creatures she had never imagined — foxes with starlit fur, deer with antlers made of braided vines — watched her journey with calm, curious eyes. Each step deeper into the Silverwood felt less like trespassing and more like coming home to a place she had never known she missed.

On the third day, standing in a clearing where the sky opened wide above her, Elara finally saw the Sunbird perched on a branch of pure white bark. It turned its great golden head toward her, and in that moment, without a single word spoken between them, she understood everything the village elders had spent their whole lives trying to explain. Magic was not something you searched for. It was something you remembered. She placed the feather gently at the base of the tree, bowed her head, and smiled all the way home.
